Fouad Hajji began his career as a breakdancer and quickly reached a high level. His interest for acting developed at the age of 20. He enrolled in drama school Parallax in Brussels and went on to study for 2 years at Flanders Acting Studio. In 2010, he landed a contract with a talent agency in Los Angeles and since then Fouad has been living between Brussels and Los Angeles. He landed his first major role in 2013 on 'NCIS: Los Angeles' opposite Daniela Ruah and Eric Christian Olsen.

Since then his career took off. After several independent films, he is shortlisted for a role on Clint Eastwood's 'American Sniper' as well as 'Killing Jesus', executive produced by Ridley Scott.
